Baby Snake in Glove Decides Pennant Race

SALEM, N. H. — Many things have decided a baseball pennant, but St. Michael's baseball team has what may be the most unique claim for pennant-winning causes ever heard in baseball circles. For, St. Michael's won the Lawrence suburban league pennant because of a snake. Here's the story.

The Salem A. C. was leading, 4-2, in the seventh inning when Bruce Magoon was told by the Salem coach to go in and play shortstop.

Magoon picked a glove from underneath the bench and trotted on the field. The first St. Michael batter singled. Then came a walk. The next batter hit sharply to short.

Magoon bobbled the ball and all hands were safe. The shortstop felt something in his gloved hand which he thought was a sponge. He pulled off the glove. Out popped a foot-long black snake.

Magoon protested but the umpire found nothing in the rules to change the situation. St. Michael's won 6-4.

Kansas Sheriff Offers 'Laziest' Title Entry

LAWRENCE, KAN.—Sheriff Will Jones has a candidate for the "laziest man" title.

Deputies investigated reports that a motorist was blinking his lights to attract attention on a high way near here.

They found the motorist parked at the side of the road with a flat tire. The "laziest" driver explained:

He wasn't enthusiastic about the hike to a nearby service station for help, so he blinked his lights hoping to get a passing motorist to stop.

"I wanted someone to call a garage for me," he said.

Fourteen met death on Virginia highways last week-end.

Man, Wife, Spend Life In Helping Stammerers

WINTER PARK, FLA.—A woman with 60 years stammering in her family has teamed with her husband to devote their finances and the latter years of their lives to correcting the stuttering of others.

They are 54-year-old Eleanor Weston Emery and her husband, Theodore, 60. They have been helping children and adults since 1935.

Mrs. Emery's eldest brother was a stammerer. She herself stammered so badly she could obtain no formal education and had to do with private tutors and several years abroad. Her first son, now 28, still stammers a little. Two other sons never stuttered.

Her first son was growing up when she realized no one could cure her—that she had to help herself and her son. She now speaks clearly. Her husband has a speech hesitancy, but it comes from difficulty in choosing the right word in conversation "and I guess association with stutterers hasn't helped, either."

The two conduct the nonprofit Emery institute here, incorporated under Florida law and so recognized by the United States treasury department. On the advisory committee are such persons as authors Irving Bacheller and Dr. Kathryn Abbey Hanna, also a professor at Rollins college here; Dr. Eugene R. Smith, Rollins trustee; and Rt. Rev. Oliver L. Loring, Episcopal bishop of the diocese of Maine.

"Strangely," Mrs. Emery says, "a stammerer can talk perfectly when he is alone, when very angry, usually while singing or when absolutely unconscious of self. He can always talk to a pet without stammering when he is alone with it."

VA Would Clamp Curbs On Fly-By-Night School

WASHINGTON. — The Veterans administration wants curbs on the enrollment of veterans in "fly-by-night" proprietary schools said to be mushrooming in unemployed areas.

If this isn't done "taxpayers are going to be bled white," says H. V. Gosling, the man who runs the vast GI bill education program.

Stirling says 1,400 new proprietary schools teaching everything from business administration to paper hanging have sprung up in the last year, concentrating in areas where veterans can't get jobs.

If something isn't done about it, he says, 1,000,000 veterans will be enrolled in these schools by next January.

Stirling has no quarrel with long - established proprietary schools or many of the newer ones.

But he says the cost of sending one veteran through a one-year course at a fly-by-night school teaching house painting, for example, might cost $1,020 in tuition and "consumable supplies" for which VA would pay.

Square Dancing Takes Firm Hold In New York City

NEW YORK—Square dancing—that beloved recreation of the rural and mountain people—has taken firm hold of New Yorkers much in the same way it has their rural counterparts—and much in the same way its charms are being "discovered" by the teen-agers of the nation.

Last summer, 250,000 persons attended the square dances at three of the city's parks and playgrounds, and more than a half-million New Yorkers took advantage of a similarly free program of social dancing conducted with popular bands in parks and playgrounds of the city's four more populous boroughs.

The square dancing programs usually go like this:

A loudspeaker booms. A voice tells the dancers to form squares. The voice belongs to the callers—some of the like Ed Durlacher of the Top Hands and one of the city's best callers. Ed's instructions are always larded with bits of salty humor. Before the tyro or the visitor can grasp out his surprise, he has acquired a pretty fair idea of some of the simple dances.

How Durlacher Does It

Take a typical Durlacher-called dance. Here's how it went:

Durlacher alerted his dancers with a cowbell and announced that "Honolulu Baby" would be the next dance.

"Face your partners," he intoned, "but don't get the horrors—just face them."

The seven musicians started playing. Durlacher began, "First gents to the right, circle, then hands around. Swing with the other fellow's lady. When you have swung go back where you belong and swing with your Honolulu Baby.

"Oh, you swing her around, you swing her up and down. Promenade with your lady. Your arm across her waist and you promenade to place—promenade with your Honolulu Baby."

Gain Popularity

The square dances, which are more popular this year than ever, also attract Walter S. Mack Jr., president of the company, which sponsors the square dances, and Mrs. Mack. Both watch the proceedings intently.

Elsewhere in the city thousands of couples who are not square-dance addicts take part in social dancing sponsored by another company in conjunction with the park department. Favorite band leaders, including Tommy Ryan, Sonny Dunham, Larry Clinton, Alvino Rey and Ray McKinley play nightly on weekdays in a project begun for service men in the war and continued at the request of the park department and by popular demand.

Grain Sorghum Grazing Cuts Farm Feeding Cost

The widespread use of grain sorghum for fall grazing has proved this crop to be one of the best grown for livestock, according to J. T. Graves, Clemson extension livestock specialist.

The grain sorghum gives grazing at a time of year that most other types of grazing are unavailable. It fits in very well between summer pastures and green winter grazing crops.
